EXECUTIVE SUMMARY

The last census conducted in 1985 provided the basis of estimating the population of Sierra Leone for an undue long period of time. The long interval between the 1985 and 2004 censuses created a paucity of data that forced various agencies to come up with estimates of various national, sub regional and sectoral population parameters. This work based on the 2004 census provides population projections for Sierra Leone at national, regional and local council/administrative levels for the period 2005-2014. The fertility levels in Sierra Leone continue to remain high and relatively stable with estimates of Total Fertility Rate decreasing slightly from 6.5 in 1974 to 6.3 in 1985 and 6.1 in 2004. On the other hand mortality levels in Sierra Leone are declining although they are still high compared to other African countries. In 1985, life expectancy for males was 37.7 years, while that of females was 40.3 years. In 2004, life expectancy improved to 47.5 years and 49.4 years for males and females respectively.

Evaluation of past age-sex population data for Sierra Leone has always shown evidence of misreporting and heaping. Therefore the Brass Logits Transformation Method was used to smooth the age sex data, which was the principal input for projecting the national population through the cohort component method. DemProj, a component of the Spectrum software was used to project the population under, high, medium and low variant assumptions. The link between DemProj and AIM (Aids Impact Model) in Spectrum made it possible to factor in the potential demographic impact of HIV/AIDS on the projected population using a set of HIV/AIDS assumptions.

The sub national population has been projected on the assumption that the observed intercensal rate of change stabilizes in the very long run period. Additionally, the Urban Rural Growth Difference (URGD) method; the assumed age-specific enrolment rates; the prevailing teacher pupil ratios for the various levels (Primary, Junior Secondary and Senior Secondary); the observed age-sex headship rate; the projected working age population and the assumed future trends in age specific activity rates for the various administrative units, were used in carrying out sub national and sectoral projections.

According to the low variant projections the population is expected to reach 5.7 million in 2010 and 6.2 million in 2014. The medium and high variants on the other hand indicate that the population will reach 6.3 million and 6.4 million respectively in 2014. Also, Freetown is projected to contain more than a million persons by 2014. Other areas of projected population concentration will continue to be Bo, Port Loko, Kenema, Kailahun, and Tonkolili each of which will contain around half of a million persons by the end of the projection period. Furthermore, the urban population is projected to reach over 40 percent for periods beyond 2010. As a lingering effect of the drop in over all sex ratio, the projections further show that there will continue to be more women than men in the total urban and total rural populations.

Moreover, the total number of school age population will increase from about 762,000 in 2005 to about 1,025,000 in 2014. However the total school enrolment is projected to increase from about 557,000 in 2005 to 777,000 in 2014. Also, the total number of teachers required is expected to grow from 24,000 in 2005 to 33,000 in 2014. The projected number of households will increase from about 109,000 male headed households and 46,000 female headed households to reach 133,000 male headed households and 52,000 female headed households in 2014, engendering an increase in the number of housing requirement from 893,000 in 2005 to 1,076,000 in 2014. Also, the working age population is projected to decrease from 4.1 million to 3.6 million, with economically active population decreasing from 2.6 million to 2.2 million. The projected decreases are as a result of changes in the projected demographic composition in which the population less than 15 years increases while that for persons 15 years and over decrease slightly.

The projection results clearly show that the population will continue to grow and hence be a very critical factor that will affect development interventions. The population will continue to be youthful. This will continue to pose a major challenge for development interventions and nation building which strongly calls for concrete strategies for youth empowerment. Also increasing levels of urbanisation should attract appropriate result oriented measures for appropriate decentralised governance and service delivery. Additionally, the potential demographic impact of HIV AIDS should be a major concern and efforts should be made to slow down the impact of the disease on the future population of Sierra Leone. Finally consideration should also be given to making reproductive health services and information available and accessible to the people, along side other development interventions.

CHAPTER I

1.0 INTRODUCTION

1.1 Background

The last census conducted in 1985 provided the basis of estimating the population of Sierra Leone for an undue long period of time. As a result the estimates and projections have proved to be out of tune with the results of the 2004 population and housing census principally because of the difficulty of factoring in the impact of the war on the pace of population growth.

It is important to note that beyond a given period of time it became practical not to depend on the results of the 1985 census because they were almost obsolete and over taken by dramatic events. In this respect various agencies came up with estimates of various national, sub regional and sectoral population parameters for the design of programme interventions. For instance, the United Nations (2001: 400), Government of Sierra Leone (2002: 7) and Coakley, George J (2004: 34.1), estimated the national population as 5.53 million, 5.6 million and 6 million respectively. The conduct of the 2004 population and housing census therefore provides an important source of data for planning and development. This will also put an end to the various and often diverse estimation of the population.

An important factor of planning for a country's development, both at the national and local levels, is the size and composition of her population and the way it will change in the future. This thus underscores the important role of population projections in the planning process. This work will provide the population projections for Sierra Leone at national, regional and local council/administrative levels for the period 2005-2014 based on 2004 census population results. The projected figures are presented in various disaggregated forms. These will provide a vital reference point and be a vital data source for diverse purposes.

1.2 Review of Population Trends

Sierra Leone has had nine censuses since 1901. The 2004 population and housing census is the fourth complete count of the population conducted in Sierra Leone. The first was in 1963, the second in 1974 and third in 1985. The censuses of 1901 to 1948 did not include a complete coverage of provincial areas; rather only estimates of these areas were added to the Western Area figures to obtain the population of the country. The population figures for the period 1901-2004 were as follows:

Year	Total Population
1901	1024178
1911	1400132
1921	1540554
1931	1768480
1948	1858275
1963	2180355
1974	2735159
1985	3515812
2004	4976871

All the censuses conducted in Sierra Leone continue to show that the population is growing rapidly. Population size has increased from 2.18 million as recorded in 1963 through 2.74 million and 3.5 million in 1985 to 4.9 million in 2004. Also all the censuses show that the population is very youthful with more than 40 per cent of the population under age 15.

The levels of fertility and mortality have remained high with Total Fertility Rate remaining about 6 per woman. Although mortality levels are declining, yet they are still very high compared to the sub-Saharan average. In the past Infant Mortality has declined from 225 per thousand in 1974 to 194 per thousand in 1985 and 115 per thousand in 2004. This is above the level for sub-Saharan of 88 per thousand as given in the (UN 2001:50).

Before the war the distribution of the population was determined by regional imbalances in economic endowment; with high concentrations in places like Kono, Kenema and Port Loko Districts as well as Freetown. During the war forced migration contributed to the distortion of both spatial distribution and population movement patterns. For instance Kono District, which used to have high population next to Freetown, has a decline in population from 389,657 in 1985 to 335,401 in 2004. This was certainly as a result of movement of people from the district at the time of the census to Bombali District in search of diamond. Subsequently, Bombali District has more than proportionate increase in population from 317,729 in 1985 to 408,390 in 2004. Freetown, which was regarded as the safest place during the war, also attracted a large influx of people such that by the time of the census the population has increased by 64.5 percent, from 469,779 in 1985 to 772,873 in 2004.

1.3 Projection Techniques and Types

Projections are estimates of the population for future dates. They illustrate plausible causes of future population change based on assumptions about future demographic trends in births, deaths and migration. Projected figures are based on an estimated population consistent with the most recent population census figures.

Population projection techniques have been applied since ancient times in a bid to figure out what the population of a nation or region will be within a given time period. During periods when data on the size of the population were at best scanty, projections were made by very simple methods, assuming a certain speed of doubling time. Later, and as more adequate and more reliable census data become available, projections were made by using extrapolation formulae such as arithmetic and geometric progressions.

As time progressed, the component method of population projection was developed in 1920 and has since become the most commonly used method of projections in countries around the world. This method proceeds by estimating future numbers of each sex and age group of the population according to selected assumptions with regard to mortality and fertility rates and the flow of migration.

Basically, there are therefore two demographic methods used for projecting future population. These are (i) Mathematical/Relational Method and (ii) Cohort-Component Method.

(i) Mathematical/Relational Method

By this method, population projections are usually based on the extrapolation of past trend into the future. That is, projections are made by extrapolation formulae which range in sophistication from simple arithmetic or geometric progression to the fitting of various kinds of logically selected and mathematically formulated growth curves such as the logistic straight-line functional relationships. This technique uses total population figures from the past to project future population figures and do not disaggregate the population figures in to age and sex.

(ii) Cohort-Component Method

The cohort-component method is considered in the world statistical practice to be logical and viable. It takes account of the age-sex structure of the population at the starting date of a projection and assumed fertility, mortality and (net) migration rates for the future years. With the age-sex distribution of the initial population, estimates of future population figures are obtained by applying age-and-sex-specific fertility, mortality and migration to each sub-group of the population. Also, the different "components" of population change (births, deaths and migration) are taken into account and past figures for these components are applied to the current age/sex cohorts.

This work uses the component method, given its visible advantages over the Mathematical/Relational Method.

1.4 Components of Population Change

According to Klosterman (1990), there are three variables that can cause change in size and composition of population. These are: (i) births, (ii) deaths and (iii) migration. Each of these three components is build into the Cohort-Component model.

- (i) Births: The addition of people to a (local) population can occur most clearly through the birth of children given birth to by females between the ages of 15-49 years. The fertility levels in Sierra Leone continue to remain high and relatively stable with estimates of total fertility rate (TFR) decreasing slightly from 6.5 in 1974 to 6.3 in 1985 and 6.1 in 2004. The TFR data shows that there has been only a 0.4 (6.2%) drop in fertility from 1974 to 2004 (a 20-year period). The crude birth rate (CBR) increased slightly from 48.7 per thousand in 1974 to 49.8 per thousand in 1985. This, however, decreased to 48.2 per thousand in 2004.

(ii) Deaths: This is the removal of people from the population through mortality. Unlike births, all persons are "at risk" for mortality. For this reason, mortality rates are calculated for all age/sex cohorts. Mortality levels in Sierra Leone have tended to decline slightly, although they are still high compared to other African countries. The child mortality rate (CMR) for example, has declined from 182 per thousand 1974 to 163 per thousand in 1985 and 87 per thousand in 2004. The infant mortality rates have also declined from a peak of 225 per thousand in 1974 to 194 per thousand and 115 per thousand in 1985 and 2004 respectively. This means that infant mortality has dropped by 79 per thousand from 1985 to 2004. The life expectancy at birth provides the likelihood that a person with a given set of attributes will survive a given period of time. These survival rates have continued to increase, with the life expectancy for males lagging behind that of females. In 1974 and 1985, the life expectancy for males was 33.0 years and 37.7 years respectively, while that of females was 36.0 years and 40.3 years respectively. In 2004, the data show that females still have a longer life expectancy of 49.4 years than males of 47.5 years. This means that there has been 14.5 and 13.4 years increase in the life expectancy of males and females respectively. The overall life expectancy is 48.4 years.

(iii) Migration: The last factor impacting population size is migration. Migration can occur in two directions:

- In-migration: movement of persons or families into a region or an area.
- Out-migration: movement of persons or families out of a region or an area.

Unlike births and deaths, the migration component does not rely upon the calculation of a rate, like fertility and mortality/life expectancy rates. Determining who is likely to migrate is very difficult, especially for in-migrants, so the migration component instead relies upon past levels of migration and then uses these past figures to project future migration levels. Any loss or increase in population in a past time period not accounted for by fertility and mortality rates is assumed to be the result of migration.

1.5 Limitations

The projection of a future population from past growth rate is a hazardous undertaking at best. These rates contain many variables and are sensitive to small changes in these variables. There is absolutely no guarantee that the past will have strong bearing on the future. Changes in past rates can make enormous differences when projections are made for longer time period and hence may not be reliable. Furthermore, detailed and accurate population data is needed; the more detailed and accurate, the better for Sierra Leone.

Therefore, projections are provided for a ten-year period (2005-2014) on single year basis hoping that the next census will be conducted in 2014. The population figures of the 2004 census used for the projections of the Sierra Leone population were somehow detailed and assumed reliable. Although total population projections are made for low, medium and high variants; further projections were done using the medium variant projected population figures only. The essence for this is to provide single set of data for users in order to avoid ambiguity. It is however possible and plausible for sub national and sectoral projections to be done on the basis of high and low variant assumptions. This will give three variant figures for each and every parameter.

CHAPTER II

2.0 METHODOLOGY

2.1 Source of Data

The current population projections for Sierra Leone are based on the 2004 Population and Housing Census. Thus, the population figures for the census were used to obtain the projected population figures.

2.2 Adjustment of Data

Evaluation of past age-sex population data for Sierra Leone has always shown evidence of misreporting and heaping. The 2004 population figures were subjected to “smoothing” in order to acquire reliable analysis. Among the various techniques available for eliminating or reducing such irregularities in the age-sex data is the Brass Logits Transformation Method which, even in the absence of data on births, it linearises the age distribution of population with the aid of a stable population model that is free from reporting error. The method is used to smooth the data without affecting genuine peculiarities of the population.

To carry out the smoothing exercise, the North Family Model in the Coale and Demeny Regional life Tables and Stable Populations was chosen. This Model has been chosen because it better describes the mortality pattern in Sierra Leone, with especially child mortality being relatively higher than infant mortality. As a result, Level 13 of the said Model has been selected because the cumulative proportion of the 2004 census for Sierra Leone was observed to be closer to that exhibited by that Level, at a growth rate of 2 percent. Appendix 1 shows the adjustment procedure for females and the derivation of the male population from the adjusted female population using age-specific-sex ratios from the chosen stable population with a sex ratio at birth of 103 males per 100 females calculated from the 2004 census data on births during the last 12 months.

2.3 The Method of Projecting the Population: Cohort-Component Method

The method used for estimating and projecting the population of Sierra Leone based on the 2004 population is the cohort-component method. The demand for more informative and more in-depth projections has led to the use of the cohort-component projection technique; a technique that incorporates information about age/sex cohorts and the different ways a given population can change in the projection of future populations. The distribution of the population by age is very important to local planning efforts. This method is simply defined by the use of estimates or projections of births, deaths, and net migration to update a population. The component method is expressed by the following equation:

$$P_t = P_{t-1} + B_{t-1,t} - D_{t-1,t} + M_{t-1,t};$$

where  $P_t$  = population at time  $t$ ,

$P_{t-1}$  = population at time  $t-1$ ;

$B_{t-1,t}$  = births, in the interval from time  $t-1$  to time  $t$ ,

$D_{t-1,t}$  = deaths, in the interval from time  $t-1$  to time  $t$ , and

$M_{t-1,t}$  = net migration, in the interval from time  $t-1$  to time  $t$ .

The components of population change are estimated or projected separately, and applied to the equation recursively to produce a series of populations. The unit of time is single year.

The elements of the procedure of the Cohort-Component Method are as follows:

- a) the initial numbers of female population by sex and age are multiplied by assumed survival rates in successive future periods in order to obtain the numbers of survivors in future year (of age) or at the end of each future 5-year period;
- b) the projected number of females in reproductive ages are multiplied by assumed fertility rates for each age in order to calculate the number of births;
- c) the total number of births are distributed by sex according to an assumed sex ratio at birth;
- d) the numbers of births of each sex are multiplied by the appropriate survival rates in order to calculate the numbers of survivors at the end of each year (or 5-year period);
- e) the assumed net balance of migration is added to (or subtracted from) the projected population of each sex and age (or age group) in each future year or 5-year period.

The procedure is repeated for each year or 5-year period through out the time span of the projection depending on whether the population is in single or five years.

2.4 Projection Assumptions

The derived smoothed population was the basis of carrying out three variant national projections: low, medium and high; based on corresponding fertility, mortality and migration assumptions using the Spectrum software. The parameters used were as calculated by consultants preparing analytical chapters on fertility and mortality rates.

Spectrum is a windows-based software, which constitutes:

- Demography (DemProj); a programme for population projections;

- Family Planning (FamPlan) - a programme for projecting family planning requirements;
- Benefit-Cost - a programme for comparing the cost of implementing family planning programmes;
- AIM (Aids impact Model) – a programme to project the consequences of the AIDS epidemic;
- Socioeconomic Impact of High Fertility and Population Growth (RAPID) – a programme to project the socioeconomic consequences of high fertility and rapid population growth.

The integration in Spectrum revolves around projections made in DemProj which supports calculations in other components. DemProj requires information on the number of people by age and sex in the base year, as well as the current data and assumptions on future trends in total fertility rate (TFR), the age distribution of fertility, life expectancy at birth by sex, a choice of the most appropriate life table, and where available the magnitude and pattern of international migration.

It is recognized that other softwares like MortPark developed by the UN could also be used to do general projections without factoring in the potential impact of HIV/AIDS. On the other hand, the link between DemProj and AIM in Spectrum makes it possible to examine the demographic impact of HIV/AIDS. For this reason the Spectrum software has been chosen to carry out the population by age and sex for Sierra Leone.

The projections for the High Variant are made on the assumption that the observed fertility levels remain constant while life expectation for both male and female improves by 3.5 years for every five years.

On the other hand, the Medium Variant projections are based on the assumption that the observed total fertility rate declines from 6.1 to 5.54 by 2019 while life expectation improves by 2.5 years for every five years

For the Low Variant it has been assumed that fertility declines from 6.1 to 5.90 in 2019 while life expectation improves by only one year every five years. The input parameters are shown in Table 1 below.

The assumptions have been based on observed trends in fertility which have remained high and declining mortality levels which as shown by increases in expectation of life from 1963 to 2004 as outlined in Part 1.4 of this Monograph.

It is assumed for all the variants that International migration does not affect the population change in Sierra Leone. This implies that net migration is zero for all ages.

Table 1: Demographic Projection Assumptions

Variant	Period	TFR	Expectation of Life
			Males	Females
High	2004 – 2009	6.10	47.50	49.40
	2009 – 2014	6.10	51.00	52.90
	2014 – 2019	6.10	54.50	56.40
Medium	2004 – 2009	6.10	47.50	49.40
	2009 – 2014	5.82	50.00	51.90
	2014 – 2019	5.54	52.50	54.40
Low	2004 - 2009	6.10	47.50	49.40
	2009 - 2014	5.95	48.50	50.40
	2014 - 2019	5.90	49.50	51.40

There have been two HIV Sero-Prevalence surveys conducted in 2002 and 2005 which gave prevalence parameters as 0.9 percent and 1.53 percent. Although results of the 2005 survey provided the basic data for the HIV/AIDS assumptions, data for the same parameters were not available. The assumptions should therefore be accepted with caution. However, they have been employed to give an idea of the possible future impact of HIV/AIDS on the population parameters. So the assumptions and inputs were that;

- i) HIV was first recorded in 1987.
- ii) the current Adult HIV Prevalence is assumed to increase from 1.53 as observed in 2004 to 4.9 in 2029
- iii) HIV Progression among adults and children follow the slow pattern option presented by the software.
- iv) Less than 10 percent of persons with HIV are on ARV (Anti-Retro-Viral)
- v) Percentage of those who need ARV therapy increases from less than 5 in 2004 to 100 percent by 2029
- vi) 80 percent of those on ARV survive to the following year
- vii) The 2004 observed ratio of female to male prevalence of 1.06 stabilises to 2.00 by 2029
- viii) Both the male and female ratio of HIV prevalence for each age group to the prevalence at 25 to 29 years remain constant for the projection period
- ix) 75 percent of infants with AIDS die within a year and that the life expectancy after the onset of AIDS is one year
- x) It is assumed that perinatal rate of transmission through out the projection period is 32 percent

The Urban Rural Growth Difference (URGD) method has been used to project total rural and urban populations. The method as extensively explained in the United Nations Manual VIII (Methods for Projection of Urban and Rural Population) takes into consideration the net difference between the rate of growth in urban and rural population rural populations respectively. It has been observed that compared to other method of projecting urban and rural populations, it avoids giving absurd results especially for long term projections and it is also compatible with common sense understanding of the inverse relationship between urban and rural populations across time, especially taking into consideration net migration and reclassification of localities. The method also captures trends in urbanization across countries irrespective of their level of development because it is consistent with the logistic curve description of the trends in urban population every where.

Using the URGD method the projected urban and rural populations of the country were obtained from the projected total population as shown in Table 5.

The observed age-sex distribution within the two components (rural and urban) are assumed to be stable and hence held constant through out the projection period. This has been used to obtain the projected urban and rural population by age and sex for the period 2005 to 2014 shown in Table 6.

In the absence of data to map out trends in age specific enrollment rate<sup>1</sup> for the councils, the option has been to turn to trends at the national level. At the national level, it has been observed that the age specific enrollment rates for males jointly increased on the average by 3.28, percent, 2.17 percent and 3.33 percent for age groups 6-11, 12-14 and 15-17 years respectively. For females these rates jointly increased by 5.12 percent, 4.03 percent and 6.58 percent. It can be observed that these age groups in fact roughly correspond to Primary, Junior Secondary and Senior Secondary levels. On the basis of this, it is therefore assumed that:

- a) Age specific enrollment rates corresponding to Primary Level improve at an annual rate of 0.3281 percent and 0.51204 percent for males and females respectively;
- b) Age specific enrollment rates corresponding to Junior Secondary Level improve at an annual rate of 0.21673 percent and 0.40416 percent for males and females respectively;
- c) Age specific enrollment rates corresponding to Senior Secondary Level improves at an annual rate of 0.332535 percent and 0.65849 percent for males and females respectively.

These assumed growth rates are applied to the 2004 age specific enrollment rates to obtain the projected enrollment rate for the local councils. Further to this the projected number of students have been obtained by applying the projected rates to the single years (6 to 17) projected population.

Assuming teacher pupil ratios of 1:50 for Primary Level, 1:45 for Junior Secondary Level and 1:30 for Senior Secondary Level as agreed on by the Ministry of Education; the number of teachers required has been projected accordingly as given in Appendix 12 of this monograph.

Also the observed age-sex headship rate for each council or administrative unit is expected to remain constant and hence applied to the projected corresponding population to obtain the projected heads of households for each sex. These have been aggregated to give the total projected households for each council. It has been assumed further that one household occupies one housing unit. The households are converted to housing units accordingly.

The projection of economically active population has been based on the projection of age specific activity rates.<sup>2</sup> Accordingly, two pairs of assumptions are made for the urban/town councils (Bo Town, Bonthe Town, Freetown, Kenema Town, Koidu-New Sembehun and Makeni Town).

- a) For Males it is assumed that:
  - i) Age specific activity rates (ASARs) for age groups within the range 15-29 years will change (decline) by -4.318 percent in the next 15 years.
  - ii) The ASARs for persons 30 years old and above will change by 0.173 percent per annum in the next 15 years.

- b) For Females it is assumed that:
  - i) Age specific activity rates for age groups within the range 15-29 years will change (decline) by -5.89 percent per annum in the next 10 years.
  - ii) The ASARs for persons 30 years old and above will change by 3.129 percent per annum in the next 10 years.

This assumed rate of change in ASARs are held to be applicable throughout the projection period to all the town and municipal councils.

For the District Councils, (which are not municipal or town councils) two pairs of assumptions are also made as follows;

<sup>2</sup> Age specific activity rate = number of economically active persons in an age group divided by total number of persons in the same age group.

- c) For Males, it is assumed that:
  - (i) Age specific activity rates for age groups within the range 15-29 years will change (decline) by -2.616 percent per annum in the next 15 years.
  - ii) The ASARs for persons 30 years old and above will change by 0.309 percent per annum in the next 15 years.

- d) For Females, it is assumed that:
  - i) Age specific activity rates for age groups within the range 15-29 years will change (decline) by - 3.366 percent per annum in the next 10 years.
  - ii) The ASARs for persons 30 years old and above will change by 2.289 percent per annum in the next 10 years.

This assumed rate of change in ASARs are held to be applicable throughout the projection period to all the district councils.

These assumptions are based on the observed differential levels of ASARs among urban/rural and male/female populations. The 2004 census shows that there are disparities in the Age Specific Activity Rates (ASARs) for males and females in all the local councils and especially for the ages 15-29 years. Also it was observed that the age specific activity rates for these ages were lower in the urban administrative units or town councils. This is likely so because prevailing higher school enrolment in these towns than in the outlying administrative districts. Also with improvement in the status of women and the drive to increase female enrollment at all levels of the school system, it is necessary to assume differential trends in ASARs for the sexes.

Although the census included 10-14 years olds in the questionnaire, the projections have been done for ages 15 years and over because lower ages tend to include children in the labour force.

The projected working age population is taken to be all persons with ages 15 years and over. This is shown in Appendix 16 for Males and Females and Appendix 17 for both sexes.

Applying the projected ASARs to the projected working age population has given the projected economically active population as shown in Appendix 18 for Males and Females and Appendix 19 for both sexes.

CHAPTER III

3.0 POPULATION PROJECTIONS

3.1 National Projections

The results of the three variant projections in single years and by sex are shown in the tables below. The age-sex distribution of the three variant projections is shown in Appendices 2, 3 and 4.

Table 2: Projected Total Population of Sierra Leone by Sex (2005-2014)

2013	3,069,130	3,175,510	6,244,640
2014	3,156,840	3,259,640	6,416,480

According to the low variant projections the population is expected to reach 5.7 million in 2010 and 6.2 million in 2014. The medium and high variants on the other hand indicate that the population will reach 6.3 million and 6.4 million respectively in 2014.

3.2 Sub-national Projections

Freetown is projected to contain more than a million persons by 2014. Other areas of projected population concentration will continue to be Bo, Port Loko, Kenema, Kailahun, and Tonkolili each of which will contain around half of a million persons by the end of the projection period. The projected population for the Administrative Units (district and town councils) are shown in the Appendices 6, 7 and 8).

3.3 Urban-Rural Projections

The urban population is projected to reach over 40 percent for periods beyond 2010. As a lingering effect of the drop in over all sex ratio, the projections further show that there will continue to be more women than men in the total urban and total rural populations. The urban rural population projections are presented in Tables 5 and 6 and Appendices 9 and 10.

3.4 Projections for Education

Total number of school age population will increase from 762,000 in 2005 to about 1,025,000 in 2014. Enrolment at the primary level will continue to be higher than the secondary levels. Also administrative units with high population concentration will require more teachers. The total number of teachers required is expected to grow from 24,000 in 2005 to 33,000 in 2014.

Appendices 11 and 12 show the projected age specific enrolment for males, females and both sexes. Also, Appendices 13 and 14 show the projected number of pupils by level of schools and sex. Additionally, the projected number of teachers required is shown in Appendices 15 and 16.

3.5 Projections for Households and Housing Needs

The projected number of households will increase from about 109,000 male-headed households and 46,000 female-headed households to reach 133,000 male-headed households and 52,000 female-headed households in 2014, engendering an increase in the number of housing requirement from 893,000 in 2005 to 1,076,000 in 2014. This does not take into consideration the changes in the type and characteristic of existing housing stock. The projected male, female and total heads of households are presented in Appendices 17 and 18. Also the derived housing needs are presented in Appendix 19.

3.6 Projections of Working Age Population and Economically Active Population

The Working Age population is projected to decrease from 4.1 million to 3.6 million, with economically active population decreasing from 2.6 million to 2.2 million. The projected decreases are as a result of changes in the projected demographic composition in which the population 0 to 14 years increases from 44.0 percent to 44.3 percent while that for persons 15 years and over decreased slightly from 56 percent to 55.7 percent. The role played by the impact of HIV/AIDS in this scenario should not be over sighted and requires further investigation.

Appendices 20 and 21 show the projected working age population for each administrative unit, while appendices 22 and 23 show the projected economically active population.

CHAPTER IV

4.0 IMPLICATIONS FOR POLICY AND ACTION

From the projection results, it is clear that population growth will continue to be a very critical factor in affecting development interventions. The population will continue to be youthful since persons 15 to 24 will constitute 17.3 percent and 18.5 percent of the projected population in 2005 and 2014 respectively. Also persons 15 to 24 and 15 to 35 will constitute 30.2 percent and 31.3 percent of the projected population in 2005 and 2014 respectively. However, persons 65 years and over will slightly decline from 4.20 percent in 2005 to 3.98 percent in 2014. The youthful population structure will continue to put pressure on existing educational services and pose a major challenge for service providers.

The implementation of national development strategies and frameworks like the Vision 2025 and the SL-PRSP are therefore bound to be affected by demographic concerns. The projections show that urbanisation levels will continue to increase and demand for quality housing, schooling and other social services especially in Freetown should be a concern for governments both at the national and local levels.

Also the projection shows that a large army of young people will continue to enter the working age and become economically active with all the potential consequences for youth empowerment.

CHAPTER V

5.0 CONCLUSION

The projections show that population growth will continue in the future, which calls for interventions, especially at the local council level, that caters for the diverse needs of the people and their demand for services.

The potential impact of HIV AIDS as indicated by the indicators should be a major concern. Efforts should be scaled up to mitigate the impact of the disease.

While not advocating for population control measures, consideration should be given to making reproductive health services and information including family planning, available and accessible to the people, along side other development interventions.
